The Rule of Three

When we describe things we can use the rule of three. This means that we choose three things about the object we are describing and make them into adjectival phrases. Take a look at these examples, underline the three adjectival phrases and then write five of your own.

The meal consisted of crispy chips, succulent peas and a perfectly cooked steak.

The cockpit of the spacecraft was filled with blinking lights, hard plastic switches and countless other controls.

Viking longboats were so successful because of their adaptable design, tall sail and fearsome carved figureheads
